

Undeniably, designer Ève Gravel must have been inspired by the beautiful nature that graces the land of our province, Quebec. The white birch trees forest in winter are a thing of beauty marrying neutral colors, that of whites, greys, blacks and browns. Its forest was the visual background of her runway show. The contrasts of hues and textures seen within that winter canvas is showcased throughout her collection. Feather light pieces seen in dresses and thicker pieces translated in the use of tweed, wool and leather – all for winter love. I definitely love the knitwear of her collection with geometrical patches of white and grey stripe on the black piece. On the runway, the clothes are paired with faux-fur hats (well, I truly hope!) and boots.

---

I definitely am feeling this skirt that can be worn from work to cocktail hour!

---

A must for winter, the tweed skirt keeps the ultra-feminine touch while keeping our upper legs warm.

---

Sunday morning brunch with your beau – mini skirt and a stylish loose, no-fuss knit! Easy, breezy and beautiful.

---

This elbow-length sleeves mini-dress depicting feathers of birds of prey is a cute number to be worn on warmer days with short rocker leather jacket and thigh high boots. Classic and sexy!