GELATO ON MY MIND

July 12, 2016

Although people think that Canadians live in igloos all year long, our summers are actually really hot. I live without A/C, so I have been melting this past month... When it's super sticky out, I like to just throw on a dress, but most of the ones that I own are black, which is not ideal for hot and humid weather.

I recently came across Montreal designer Eve Gravel's website and fell in love with her Gelato dress. First of all, the shape is great because it doesn't really hug your body, a.k.a. it's perfect to wear when you want to stuff your face with brunch. I also loved that the pattern gave the illusion of a v-neck both in the front and back of the dress. I had never seen anything like it and don't own anything similar to it in my wardrobe. When I received it, I was really surprised by the quality of the fabric since everything these days seems to be quite sheer. My friend Joëlle was also very pleased with the fabric when she received her dress.

I paired the piece with a white pair of Steve Madden sandals that I bought last summer and wore my fave rings from Cadette Jewelry (seriously check her out!)

Since the dress is named Gelato, it was only fitting for me to shoot with my favourite ice cream flavour from Bang Bang: Avocado. Now, before judging, go try it out – I recommend pairing it with the Ginger Milk flavour.

Eve Gravel has pieces that fit with so many different styles that you're bound to find one that you'll fall in love with
